I always had big plans, even when I was very young. I would build skyscrapers with my building blocks. .com: What was your first impression of your co-author Bill Zanker when you started doing business with the Learning Annex? Trump: Bill Zanker had tremendous enthusiasm and focus, and he still does. I knew he'd succeed in a big way, and the success of The Learning Annex proves that I was right. .com: What has becoming a television star on The Apprentice meant for your business? Trump: My brand became more famous as I became more famous, and more opportunities presented themselves. I was already very well established, so I was well prepared, but things escalated and in a good way. .com: There are stories everywhere that the real estate market is in trouble. How should an investor or an entrepreneur respond to the current market? Trump: This is actually a very good time for entrepreneurs or investors. I would say to be positive and look for the opportunities, because the opportunities are there. .com: You're critical of the "give me" attitude that you see in many young people today. What do you look for in a young person you are bringing into your business? Trump: They have to be eager to learn and willing to work hard. I work hard and I expect the people around me to have a strong work ethic. I need people who can be part of a team and yet be able to think independently. That's one of the qualities I look for on The Apprentice—they have to be capable of both dimensions. .com: Did you really make Lee Iacocca cry? [See Think Big and Kick Ass for more details.] Trump: No, he made himself cry. From the Back Cover RISE TO DIZZYING HEIGHTS OF SUCCESS BY THINKING BIG! DONALD J.
